Cord blood of infants born in Spain shows significant differences in organochlorine compound concentrations depending on the European or Latin American origin of their mothers.